

IHN Award

The (Executive) Board of the International Haemovigilance Network (IHN) has created in 2010 an award to be presented to a person or organization who/that has made an important contribution to the advancement of haemovigilance from a scientific point of view.

The IHN Award, consisting of a certificate, a trophy and a cheque of € 4 000, is presented yearly at the International Haemovigilance Seminar (IHS). The establishment of the IHN Award was made possible thanks to a generous gift of Prof. Dr Erhard Seifried.

The awardee will give a plenary lecture at the IHN symposium IHS following his nomination and selection.

Nominations for the IHN Award may be submitted by the Official Contact Person of the IHN members or other IHN participants to the Secretary of the IHN before September 30th of a running year. Nominations should include a letter explaining why it is believed that the candidate has made an important contribution to the advancement of haemovigilance, accompanied by a copy of relevant publication(s) documenting this, a current CV and a full list of publications by the candidate. The deadline for nominations of candidates is September 30 of the year preceding the next IHS where the IHN Award will be handed out at the closure of the official scientific programme.

Former IHN Award winners:

2010: Jean-Claude Faber, Luxembourg

2011: Lorna Williamson, United Kingdom
